As a whole the book is a most valuable contribution to our knowledge of the rivers of South America, especially of the Orinoco. It is dedicated to Mrs. Whitney, but for whose inspiring example this delayed record of the Call of the Red Gods would never have been submitted. The Flowing Road, by Caspar Whitney, with maps and photographs, 318 pages, $3.00 net, J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. More and more as the years progress children are receiving greater attention. Never in its history was our school system so criticised, analyzed and questioned. Since the day of Froebel we have had many great teachers who have shown us the importance of giving full attention to the growing child. Now we have the Montessori, the Ferrerer, the Tolstoy, and other methods of education, and the physiologist and psychologist alike have devoted their attention to finding the best methods of really educating the child. And as the spirit of Conservation is also in the air, the cry now is, Let us conserve the child. One of the latest books on this subject is from the pen of Dr. Arthur Holmes, assistant director of the psychological clinic of the University of Pennsylvania. His aim is to show how the clinic helps the teacher know how to treat backward children. In the East these have been placed side by side with normal children to the manifest disadvantage of both, et...
