Only a part of it is yet cleared, being in many places covered with its original woods; a circumstance to the benefit of the present planters in many respects. The face of the country in one respect is very singular; there is neither a brook, rivulet, or spring in the whole island, which obliges the inhabitants to depend on artificial ponds, cisterns, and reservoirs of water for all their uses. ThreatenM 2 ing ing as this was originally, experience has removed the difficulties which flowed from it, and they have been able to supply themselves very regularly with this necessary of life. The soil of the island is generally fandy, but not therefore infertile; on the contrary, there are nowhere more flourishing sugar plantations to be met with than in this island; for there is a loamy mixture in the fand which keeps it from burning; and the reddish earths, though fandy, are found excellent cane lands. The produce of the island has been thus stated: . 15,500 hhds. sugar at i5l.-232,500 Rum, ---63,933 sundry articles, --i0,000 These sundry articles are ginger, a little indigo and tobacco, fruits and other things, common in all the islands; but the quantities are but small, and I should rather think i0,0001. too great an allowance for them. We have no island in the West Indies, Jamaica and the ceded ones excepted, that is capable of such improvement as Antigua: indeed...
